It is desirable to have the ability to release the connection and to permit the coupled conveyors to move with respect to each other and to uncouple the conveyors with a minimum amount of force exerted by the operator. One type of coupling of this type is described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,506,388. The coupling includes a male and female coupling members which cooperate to provide a mechanical connection between the conveyors. When it is desired to disconnect the coupling, an elongated wedge is placed into engagement with the female coupling member, thereby deforming the material from which the female coupling member is made and breaking the connection. This type of coupling requires considerable force to disconnect and is suitable only for limited applications.Morphology of araerospora alba, a fungal symbiont of live rhizobia. Some specimens of araerospora alba (Mycelial Fungi, Botryosphaeriaceae) grow along the roots of legume plants in the presence of live rhizobia. The fruiting bodies appear in the potting mix between 5 and 18 d after inoculation of the roots with rhizobia, and are found on the surface of the inoculated roots, above the rhizobia-filled root hairs, and in the roots. When kept in moist, non-nutritive soil, the terminal fruiting bodies of the fungus grow in powdery white masses. Young structures are pinkish, but soon turn pale yellowish and finally white. The filiform, aseptate, sympodially proliferating mycelium is smooth. Pseudoparaphyses of the hyphae are abundant, and the septate hyphal ends are swollen. The trabecular hyphae are slightly curved and form a dense three-dimensional network within the soil
