Update your product, please.1. Technical Field The present invention relates generally to data processing systems and in particular to a method and apparatus for improving the speed of cache memory systems. Still more particularly, the present invention relates to a method and apparatus for reducing access to the memory subsystem of a data processing system. 2. Description of the Related Art In a conventional data processing system, a central processing unit (CPU) is the primary controller and is responsible for processing data and instructions. The CPU coordinates the processing of data in the data processing system and is responsible for moving data from main memory to secondary storage and from secondary storage to main memory. If the processing of data requires access to data which is located in secondary storage, then the CPU has to access the secondary storage. When the CPU needs to access data, the CPU must first load the address of the data into a register that is then passed to a special input/output (I/O) location called an I/O port. The CPU determines whether to access the data in main memory or secondary storage by examining the address of the data stored at the I/O port. If the data is in the main memory, then the data can be accessed from the main memory with little effort. However, if the data is located in secondary storage, then the CPU has to access a storage device, such as a direct access storage device (
